The reference to the status of the footpath between the two parcels is in my analysis a Saxon Straete (made road): reference my article in Trans. Worcs Arch Soc 3rd ser. 20 (2006), pp. 94-8. As an ancient way, the presumption is that the boundary is in fact down the centre of the road, so that the boundary hedge will belong to the adjoining landowner. I am not suggesting this requires any mitigation to the site for historical reasons.
